Re: CenturyLink, Inc. and Level 3 Communications, Inc. Consolidated Applications for Consent to the Transfer of Control of Licenses and Authorizations (WC Docket No. 16-403)

Dear Counsel:

Today, CenturyLink filed a letter stating that it intends to file additional data to supplement the Applicants' previous responses to our requests for information. Accordingly, we are pausing the Commission's informal 180-day shot clock as of today, June 9, 2017.

The 180-day clock represents a good-faith undertaking by the Commission to complete action on assignment and transfer of control applications within a certain timeframe and is a means to keep interested parties informed of the progress of those applications. The clock carries with it no procedural or substantive rights or obligations but merely represents an informal benchmark by which to evaluate the Commission's progress. Although the Commission seeks to meet the 180-day benchmark, its statutory obligation under the Communications Act to determine whether an assignment or transfer serves the public interest takes precedence over the informal timeline. Thus, the Commission retains the discretion to determine whether, in a particular review proceeding, events beyond the Commission's control, the need to obtain additional information, or the interests of sound analysis constitute sufficient grounds to stop the clock.

We appreciate your cooperation in providing this material, which we believe is necessary to allow us to complete our review of your applications, and we look forward to receiving it. Once we have had an adequate opportunity to review the new information, including engaging in any discussions with the Department of Justice, as permitted under our rules, and determining whether we need additional information, we will restart the clock.

Sincerely,
